Put twenty-five clams into a half pint of water after washing them thoroughly. Set them over a fire and let the water boll: when the shells open they are done. Take them off the fire, remove the heads and leathery parts of the clams, and chop the remainder fine Save all the clain juice in the stells when the clams are taxen out. Peel and slice six potatoes and mince two onlons, add a small slice f larding pork, six sea biscults, pepper and sait to the taste, the clain juice, a pint of milk and one of water, half a graved nutmeg and a teaspoonful of celery seed, or a stalk of celery minced fine. Let this mixture cook slowly for your hours. Then aid the clams, with two teaspoonfuls of Worcester sauce and half a cupful or tomato catsup. When the chow der boils up once it is ready. Some cooks add two tablespoonfuls of sherry, but this does not seem to belong to a chowder, nor the sliced lemons that are sometimes served in it

Norfolk has a crop which is worth millions of dollars annually. Norfolk supplies the civilized world with peanuts.

The street-corner Italian who empties a plat in your overcoat pecket gets them from here, for this is the only peanut market in the world. Smyrna has its figs, Barbary its dates, Bordeaux its grapes and Norfolk its peanuts. The peanut magnates grow the edible tuber in Nansemond, Isle of Wight, Surry and outhampton Countles, but the common market is in Norfolk. The rows for the nuts are laid off three feet apart. They are made fitteen inches deep, and phosphates are largely used as an underdressing. They are strewn along in these trenches about the middle of April, and mature after the same term which is required for potatoes. It is a crop which is marketed like the Dutch drumbead and purple Savoy cabbage, running from November to March. The nuts, however, have to go through the factories before they are shipped northward and these factories are with few exceptions
